Description of scientific activity

I conduct research at the intersection of literary studies and art studies, expanding it with discoveries from the field of social neuroscience. I have studied similar relationships, moving in areas such as: multisensory, ekphrasis, cultural artifacts, neurofilology. My work focuses on the trend described as the neurobiological turn (Doris Bachmann-Medick), and draws on the „third culture” (John Brockman) of the 1970s. In the 20th century, the idea of collaboration between natural scientists and humanists in the process of understanding and developing a new image of man became alive. At present, I consider the most important task to be applying the discoveries in the field of social neuroscience to teaching.
