Description of scientific activity

My research interests focus on the English language in the Old and Middle English periods. I conduct research on derivation in Middle English. This research has resulted in numerous publications on the semantics and productivity of selected nominal and adjectival suffixes, both native and of French origin, based on my own research methodology. I have also analysed the semantic profiles of selected Old English nouns that fell into disuse in the Middle English period, as well as the semantic fields associated with them. A number of my publications from 2014 to 2018 are devoted to the study of selected prepositions and adverbs in Middle English prose. Aspects analysed include frequency of use, semantics, and the process of grammaticalisation.

	I am the author of two books on derivation in Old and Early Middle English and on prepositions in Middle English. Both books were published by the academic publisher Peter Lang. I have also published over 20 articles in this field.
