Description of scientific activity

I research core issues surrounding minority language maintenance and transformation, such as community solidarity, attitudes and ideologies which speakers associate with their languages (and ultimately with the people who speak them). As the intergenerational transmission of many minority languages continues to break down, communities are finding creative ways of 'producing' so-called new speakers, who also form a group of interest for my research agenda. I am currently exploring representations of diversity in minoritised language communities, concentrating on the self-expression of LGBTQ* identities from a queer linguistics perspective. I am a member of the Horizon project Fosterlang, working on preserving linguistic diversity in Europe.
