First and last name	Aleksandra Natalia Jarosz
Academic title and position	dr. habil., university professor
Faculty, Institute, Department/Unit	Faculty of Modern Languages and Literatures; Institute of Oriental Studies; Department of Japanese Studies
Scientific discipline	linguistics
Research areas	Japonic languages, historical-comparative linguistics
Description of scientific activity	The focus of my interest lies in the Japonic family, especially South Ryukyuan/Sakishima languages (Miyako, Yaeyama, Yonaguni), as well as in the historically attested varieties of the Japonic lects. I am interested in the history of the Japonic languages also in an interdisciplinary perspective (including archaeology, anthropology and genetics). My research includes linguistic typology, protolanguage reconstructions and legacy linguistics, the latter pertaining to a philological processing of archival language documentation so as to adjust it to the requirements of modern academic and educational use. Since most of the languages I study are endangered and/or minority languages, I conduct my research within the framework of language documentation and revitalization.
