Description of scientific activity

In my research, I focus on issues of Polish–German language contact, with particular attention to bilingualism and interculturality. I examine family cultures and patterns of language use in mixed families. I study language acquisition processes in bilingual contexts as well as ways in which cultural and linguistic practices are negotiated in everyday life. My perspective also includes language contact phenomena in border and cross-border regions, understanding language as a social practice shaped by mobility, migration, and multilingualism. An important area of my research is language policy from a border perspective, as well as the functioning of minority languages and processes of their maintenance or attrition. I develop the concept of “linguistic borderscape”, analyzing the impact of borders on linguistic repertoires and communicative practices, linguistic landscape, and language policies. I also work on the analysis of identity discourses in migration contexts. I conduct my research in Polish, German, English, and French.
