Research areas	linguistic worldview, media discourse, multimodality, intertextuality, lexical innovations
Description of scientific activity	For many years, my academic interests have focused on lexical innovations in the Polish and Russian languages. I have recently expanded my research in this area to include media discourse analysis and the issue of multimodal communication. The results of these academic inquiries include articles describing the language of the pandemic, publications on media coverage of Russian aggression in Ukraine, as well as reflections presented at academic conferences on the functions and persuasive potential of Polish, Russian, and English-language internet memes. At the same time, I continue to focus on the linguistic and cultural worldview reflected in Polish, Russian, and English idioms and proverbs. My most recent research in this area has examined the attitudes of the landed gentry in Poland and Russia as seen through the eyes of peasants, as well as the image of butterflies in Slavic cultures and languages.
