Description of scientific activity	I have conducted research on linguistic variety and change, in both distant and more recent times, from sociolinguistic and sociopragmatic perspectives. In other words, I have investigated the interrelation between variation in language and the historical, social, cultural and situational context in which it is embedded. I am particularly interested in different aspects of standardization, language contact, code-switching, lexical-semantic change, visual pragmatics, multimodality, stylistics, discourse analysis, orthography and typography. I am the author or co-editor of approximately thirty publications, for example, The Cambridge Handbook of Historical Orthography (co-edited, Cambridge University Press, 2023), Orthographic systems in thirteen editions of the Kalender of Shepherdes (1506–1656) (Peter Lang, 2013). I can supervise PhD dissertations on topics falling within any of the above-mentioned research areas.
