Description of scientific activity

I am an Associate Professor at the Faculty of Modern Languages and Literatures at Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań. My research is situated within applied linguistics, with a focus on ecolinguistics, professional and intercultural communication, and, more recently, multilingualism and family language policy. My PhD (2006) examined intercultural aspects of British and Polish advertising discourse, while my post-doc dissertation (DLitt, 2018) explored corporate discourse through an eco-critical, corpus-assisted analytical framework. From 2020 to 2023, I participated in the Erasmus+ international project MaMLiSE, which focused on the education of children with migration experience and aimed to develop educational materials for teachers and parents to support children's multilingual development in both school and home contexts. I am currently (2025–2028) engaged in the Horizon Europe project FOSTERLANG, where my research focuses on language and educational policies. I have published over 60 academic works, including four monographs, and actively participate in international academic exchange.
