Scientific discipline	Literature (literary studies)
Research areas	Irish literature, English literature, medievalism, orientalism, modernism, postcolonial studies.
Description of scientific activity	My research explores English and Irish literature, with a focus on twentieth- and twenty-first-century fiction. I examine how narrative forms engage with history, memory, and cultural identity—particularly in relation to colonial legacies, globalization, and economic change—as well as the intersections between literature, politics, and ethics. I have written on the history of English and Irish literatures, as well as on medievalism and orientalism and their impact on contemporary writing. My current research, however, concentrates on archival work and on exploring the connections between the history of psychiatry and psychology.
